Expression of interest

With the demand for specialist services increasing, health care services internationally are responding by trialing electronic consultation systems like eConsultant to address the need for timely, better-coordinated, complex care.

eConsultant is a free program that provides general practitioners (GPs) and their patients with access to specialist input without a face-to-face consultation.

GPs can access specialist advice for adult patients (older than 16 years) via their practice software, with a response from an experienced specialist within three business days via secure messaging.

The service can be easily accessed using a template set up within the practice software system (Best Practice or MedicalDirector).

To use Mater eConsultant, practices must have access to the Medical-Objects send and receive function. NQPHN are funding the first-year annual subscription for those general practices that are not currently using Medical-Objects.

To be eligible, practices must first register for the eConsultant program (using the below EOI link). Once registered, you will receive a Medical-Objects request form for completion, prior to installation and training.
